HOW AN INCREASE IN WOMEN'S EDUCATION RESULTS IN HIGHER ECONOMIC GROWTH

In the modern era, Women's education is very necessary for every field for the development of the country. Women's education is important to make our country socially and economically developed. Educated women can easily contribute to society as well as home if they are well qualified.

Women's Education plays an important role in human life and also for the smooth functioning of life. These days people are more curious to acquire more and more knowledge for success. Moreover, the government should provide more amenities to the female and try to remove discrimination on the basis of gender. Women's education is essential for the appropriate social and economic development of the country.

Increase in the amount of female education in regions tends to correlate with high levels of development. Some of the effects of the women's education are related to economic development. Women's education increases the income of women and leads to growth in GDP. Educating girls leads to a number of social benefits including many related to women's empowerment.

Both individuals and countries benefit from women's education. Individuals who invest in education receive a net monetary gain over the course of their lifetime.

According to Hoxby Pataines, lead education economist at the World Bank, "the profitability of education, according to estimates of private rate of return, is indisputable, universal and global". This principle holds particularly for women, who can expect a 1.2% higher return than men on the resources they invest in education.

Providing one extra year of education to girls increases their wages by 10-20%.

This individual monetary gain creates an increase in the overall economic productivity of a country.

In addition to total economic growth, women's education also increases the equitability of the distribution of wealth in a society. Increased women's education is important for achieving this as it targets the impoverished women. There is also evidence that lower gender disparity in educational attainment for a developing country correlates with lower overall income disparity within society.

Educated women are more likely to engage in civic participation and attend political meetings, and there are several instances in which educated women in the developing world were able to secure benefits for themselves through political movements.

In sum, the examined contribution of female education to long-term economic growth of the countries. The economic benefits of educating girls are similar in size to the economic benefits of educating boys. The individual's benefits of educating girls are normally visible as the income they will earn when they find jobs. There are also benefits economic growth as women's education leads to an increase in production and income levels.

The verdict is girls' education is the path forward not only socially but also economically. For economic growth female education has become necessary as it is consistent determinant of progress in terms of both income, production, efficiency, <sup>growth</sup> ~~mortality~~ <sup>democracy</sup> ~~democracy~~ and equality. The power of female education on the economy is undeniable. One of the most important benefits of girl education is that the country's future will be brighter and better. Similarly, our economy can grow faster if more and more women become financially strong thereby reducing poverty.

Most importantly, educated women can result in a decrease in social issues like corruption, child marriage, domestic abuse and more. They will become more confident.
